

Caro TAF,

Eu sei que isto não está directamente relacionado com o seu blog. No entanto permita-me uma tentativa:

1. Um dia quando nós os nortenhos decidirmos finalmente pela revolução, este equipamento de fácil fabrico e económico (talvez não o que é feito de pão) pode vir a ser-nos muito útil contra as forças da repressão que sem dúvida nos chegarão do sul;
2. Com esta criatividade os egípcios podiam ser portugueses honorários.

Só é pena que aqui no Paquistão estas soluções não sirvam de muito.

Abraço,

So just to outline here – these are helmets made by the Egyptians whilst scrapping in their current predicament.

I shall guide you through these pieces of registered non standard army kit:

Your classic 1979 'Tribottle rag' helmet – a must in any type of combat

A late 80's 'boxhat'. The bloke next to him doesn't appear too sure of its effectiveness

A renaissance period piece of brickwear teamed with a black and cream scarf. Textbook

Im not sure that tuna sarnie he is about to lob is gonna cause to much destruction.
Old skool 80's broken bin helmet.
I personally love the fact he needs to lift it up to see – does he spend the rest of the time walking in to things??

Textbook saucepaning with lifejacket combo. He does not take, ANY!!

I literally have no idea what this is.

And the winner by 100 miles.
This bloke is going to war with 2 baguettes strapped to his ears and a ham salad roll sellotaped to his forehead. I'd def wanna be behind him if someone lobs a load of bricks at me.
